Levitical Priests

Moses appointed his own relatives as the first Jewish priests. His family came from the tribe of Levi. They were required to offer animal sacrifices for the people, but first had to offer them for their own sins. The latter obligation came from the belief that daily contact with the world rendered them ritually impure. They could not, for example, enter a room where a dead body lay. Other ritual impurities forced them to make continual sacrifices for their sins before they could pray. Jesus had no such constraints because he is the son of God. His offering on the cross eliminated the need for any further sacrifices.
